If the measure is brimful, a drap will make it run ever; if the camel is loaded al most beyond endurance, a straw will break its back, and so in Spain there will be an explosion and most probably when its emake is cleared nway the charred throne of an obsolete dynnaty will bear witness to the requirements of the epoch. But the bare circumstanes that this event can be forescen with composure is in itself significant. The political moral of the impending eatastrophe is underlined by the silence of the sorrounding nations and the reticence of their testained or simulated, they are necessarily Verandah, good Godowns and Outhouses. neither unconcerned por indifferent spectators. The import of the impending change, whatever it may be, and whether or not there is any idea of a dynastic expedient compels consideration. But it is felt on all sides that there is no ground to intervene upon, no internati nal obligation to be fulfilled by interference, no right which it is the duty of a foreign Power to vindi-

or evaded by the Papacy. If the semporal savereignty of the Holy Ses cannot be maintained on the conditions of the September Convention—for that is the issue to be determined—the practical confession of its incompetency, whether by failure, or by evasion, will be an impressive warning. That Queen of Spain may well have wished to support the Papa. Having endeavoured, not without success, to place her own Government on the basis of Me srs, H. Junaeus & Co. the Pontifical Tovernment, and appreciating the Papal influence, it was a natural wish, and in one sense, not impolitic. It may be taken for granted that, if the temporal power of the Papacy succumbs, or is abandoned, anything in the likeness thereof will be impossible at Madrid. The mistake all through, in Spain as at Rome, has consisted in a vain attempt to ignore are muplished facts. While the Pope abused this protection afford to bim, and wasted precious time, the Spanish Soversign fidlowed his example as far as circumstances admitted, and, to a certain extent, Pigs IX. may be Offices of the Undersigned. responsible for the difficulties which are closing round her Catholic Majesty. She has repeated hia nou possumus. Lika him, she assumed a divine right to govern as seemed good to herself. As he has done, she has done; and now, when they are simultane usly called upon to set their houses in order, both demur to the summons on the same theory. They contend, in effect, that they are not answerable to their aubjects, that they were bound to be guided by their own judgment, and that in fac', they have seted on the highest inspiration. The Pope has apparently the best position. He has been pratrated as a comporal Bovereign on the very principle be maintains. The French Republic renewed, as it were, his lease on this standpoint, and the September Convention was concluded, and is about to be exented, on the understanding that if he can come to terms with the people subject to his government no one shall set up against his pretensions any claim on the score of nationality. Thus, when the French troops are withdrawn there will remain a guarantee which, it may be presumed, the Queen of Spain would gladly acknowledge if it could be extended to her exigencies. In reality, however, the case of the Queen is simply aggravated by breaches of trust maich, as regards his subjects, it must be owned cumot be charged to the account of the Popo. Pins IX. renounced Liberalism when it touched his temporal estate; but Isabella II. has torn up the title-deeds on which she ascended the throne, and, besides defrauding the Spanish people, discredited a policy which, while it could be observed, interpreted and unheld public law. Spain will never recover hersell so long as she tolerates a price -ridden Government. No country that submits to ecclesiastical gaurnation can develop its resources. There can be no abiding progress that is not founded on the independence which is wholly incompatible with the Papal supremacy. The Spaniards may or may not require free institutions -that is another matter. But, to be other than they are, they must have an enlightened and independent Government, and a system of administration which allows of the formation of a pational opinion. They should not deceive themselves on what after all, the main point-their contribution to the actual conjuncture. It is common enough to say that communities are moulded by those who govern them; but the converge of the proposition is Out-houses, and Stables, (Cas and Water at least equally true, and, looking at what has come | being laid on all through the premises,) either J.
